intro-describes causality (p. 23f), / their relationship man vs natural world.

Primitive thought naturally recognized the relationship of cause + effect, but it cannot recognize our (modern) view of an impersonal, mechanical, and ^{lawlike} functioning of causality...
Since the phenomenal world is a ^{Thought} confronting early man, he does not expect to find an impersonal law regulating a process.
He looks for a purposeful will committing an act. If the rivers refuse to rise, it is not suggested that the lack of rainfalls or distant mountains adequately explain the calamity... the river or the gods intend to convey something to the people.
None: better answers than ours, which only scoot the question over.
